The New Patriotism

NATIONAL PHENOMENON which may prove to be even more significant than the outcome of the Vietnam war is the wholly new approach to their country's involvement in the conflict which thousands of Americans are now demonstrating. Quite apart from the active protests of street marchers and platform speakers, there is a vast undercurrent of popular dissatisfaction, even resentment, now being felt throughout the United States. These many persons, quietly in opposition to a major war in which their country is deeply engaged, exemplify an unprecedented type of patriotism-the conscientious feeling of patriotic men and women that their warring government is in the wrong.

It would be difficult to identify a war in which a western nation has been involved which did not automatically command the almost unanimous support of the population. It is true that World War Two had conscientious objectors, but they were considered as persons apart-isolated cases who in justice must be grudgingly respected for their religious belief but who were definitely at odds with their country. But now, for the first time, it is becoming recognized in the United States that it is not disloyal or treasonable to oppose the nation's plunge into war. Perhaps for the first time a citizen can appraise the war with which he is confronted with criteria based on its merits or otherwise, and not with hysteria which would tolerate only blind adherence to the cause.

This could be a trend that might be seen in other countries if occasion should arise. It could conceivably emerge as one of the strongest anti-war influences possible, heralding a new approach by governments to the prospect of war and resulting, it may be hoped, in decisions to forego such conflicts.

A recent Gallup poll in the United States indicates that 49 per cent of those answering believe the dispatch of troops to Vietnam in 1965 was a mistake. Forty-one believe that it was not a mistake and ten per cent did not register an opinion. Imagine the impact that such a poll result would have had in, say, 1916, or in 1942, or in 1952. The rise of the concept that a man or woman can be publicly against his country's participation in a war, yet still claim integrity and good citizenship and an unimpaired love of country, could have a revolutionary effect which would far transcend in importance the actual outcome of the Vietnam struggle. Vietnam could be the last blind war.

To Curb Excessive Power

THE VERY WIDE POWERS claimed for itself by the government in the controversial bill respecting collective bargaining and mediation have been criticized since the contents of the legislation became known. As the measure now comes under discussion in the House the government would do well to pay close attention to two amendments which have been listed by members of the Liberal opposition.

An amendment originated by Dr. McGeer would strike at one of 19, as it stands, empowers the Lieu tenant-Governor in Council-which means the cabinet-to ban strikes or lockouts in order to "protect the public interest" by referring an unresolved labor dispute to the Commission and ordering that body's decision to be final and binding. Dr. McGeer's amendment would put such a sweeping power where it rightly belongs: the Lieutenant-Gov- it stands, are lacking.

ernor in Council could order the Commission's decision to be binding only with the assent of the Legislature. This would at least place the power of decision in the hands of the province's law-making body.

An amendment of Section 19 proposed by Mr. L. A. Williams would have the cabinet refer Civil Service labor disputes to the Commission only at the request of the "employer or group of employees" involved, thus giving the Civil Service power to call for the Commission the serious flaws in Bill 33. Clause to consider the problem at hand rather than leave such a reference solely to the discretion of the government.

Government should have certain initiatives and powers in regard to labor problems, but excessive powers must be avoided. These two amendments—and there are bound to be others - would place safeguards in the legislation which, as

WHEN CANADIANS CONSIDer the United States tradingwith-the-enemy act as it affects this country, chief concern usually centres on the possibility of American industrial leaders restricting sales by their Canadian subsidiaries to nations not acceptable to the United States. Canadians naturally object to any interference by interests outside the country with trade in products originating in Canada. Mr. Theodore C. Sorensen, former chief adviser to President Kennedy, shows the other side of the coin. By rejecting business with Communist countries of Eastern Europe, he points out, the United States foregoes a growing market into which many of her friends are channelling goods. In 1967 United States trade with Eastern Europe amounted to $372 millions, which was 0.7 per cent of the country's total worldwide trade.

Yet last year, Eastern Europe's trade with Western countries amounted to 16 billions, 20 per cent more than in the preceding year, which, in turn, was 20 per cent more than the year before. In hard. economic terms, that means that the United States is sacrificing its own commercial interests to the benefit of Western Europeans and

But the Sorensen argument does not end there. He believes that trade with Eastern Europe would have important foreign policy benefits. Interchanges of a business nature between Russia and the United States, for instance, would tend to strengthen relations. Trade would provide opportunities for Communist nations to avoid returning to a hard-and-fast Communist bloc, and might divert the various economies into streams outside the channels of military production. In Mr. Sorensen's view, the United States is losing an opportunity to promote. better world security in a doubly profitable way.

Some Haziness in Price Review Plans

vealing his new tax proposals, the of certain other remarks. minister of finance announced the government's decision to create a prices review board. Although it seemed at that time a rather nebulous concept, word was subsequently passed that uncertainties w o u l d be cleared away by the prime minister in a major speech on the financial resolutions. Mr. Pearson delivered the speech on Tuesday. The difficulty is that the bold new venture looks as cloudy as ever. It may even be a mirage.

The prime minister's exposition was set in the context of a general defence of government policy. As is customary, he contended that the ministry has made "a very real and effective effort" to maintain its control over expediture increases and he noted, accurately, that in the past decade increases at the provincial-municipal level have exceeded those of the federal government.

Getting and Spending

This is not, of course, the whole story. The burden of many eloquent speeches on co-operative federalism was that by generous measures of Ottawa, by generous measures of decentralization, had shifted massive revenues to the provincial government. What provinces get, provinces will spend. The federal government seems to have had no doubts on this score because the gifts were never accompanied by exhortations to scrimp and save.

There is also the more topical husiness of medicare. Who, precisely, is pushing whom?

Mr. Pearson was, however, as candid as Mr. Sharp and been earlier about the problem now confronting us. He said "compares unfavorably countries and, of special significance, with that of the U.S.A." His warnings about the inflationary danger are, of course, heavily underlined in the report of the governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Rasminsky, which appeared on the same day.

After observing that fiscal and monetary policy are the two major instruments for influencing the economy the prime minister said that the government is attempting to supplement them with more selective programs dealing, for example, with re-training, labor mobility, industrial technology and rural development. But these are effective over the longer term. There is a need for measures with a more direct and immediate effect. "We must find some means of influencing the many individual decisions that give rise to increases in incomes, costs and prices."

What Is It?

We come then to the proposed prices review board or, as Mr. Pearson more cautiously called it, "a governmental agency or commission." How is it to be set up, how will it operate, what powers will it have, what will be its terms of

For the sake of speed, it is to be set up under the Enquiries Act, thus eliminating the need for legislation.

As to its general functions, the prime minister said: "This agency will analyze the nature and probable effect of such decisions (affecting prices, incomes and costs) and, where necessary, subject them to public review and criticism. It will also discuss price and cost problems with representatives of management labor and consumers, in order to clarify the issues involved and insure that before major decisions are reached, all concerned are aware of these issues and that the public interest is taken fully into

He added later: "To avoid any conflict or misunderstanding . . . the agency's legal functions will be limited to enquiry and report, to the focussing of public opinion on its findings, compliance with which will be voluntary."

This adds very little to Mr. Sharp's earlier forecast. Indeed, the scheme

ON the evening of March 6, in re- looks even hazier when account is taken

After: glancing at experience in Britain and the United States (which has not hitherto commended itself to the Canadian government) Mr. Pearson announced: "As an immediate step to deal with this problem in Canada, a special ad hoc committee of the cabinet . . is being established and charged with responsibility to ensure that effective action is taken promptly to develop and bring into force this program for price stability."

Further, the terms of reference are to be based on "necessary consultation" with interested parties. "Consultation with and the co-operation of the provinces will, of course, be of first importance" - since prices and costs are largely under provincial jurisdiction. In addition, there are to be consultations with "leading elements in the labor movement, and in industry, professional associations and others concerned."

Why the Delay?

If it is necessary to do all this before start can be made, why has the government waited so long to begin? After all. Mr. Sharp indicated last October and repeated in the November mini-budget that there was to be "a determined campaign to achieve by voluntary co-operation a large reduction in the unacceptably high rate at which prices and costs are increasing, including wage settlements." What happened to it? True the government was first to set an example by cutting expenditures but surely it would at least have been committee.

All the central questions seem to be unanswered. What prices will the agency seek to influence? Will it be selective, concerning itself with a few key prices, or will it seek to survey a wide field? How, without controlling prices, will it "insure" that all this analysis and review takes place "before major decisions are reached?" Will there be guidelines (as in Britain) and, if so, how in the case of an agreed wage settlement exceeding the permissible, will managemen and labor be brought before the agency and induced voluntarily to cut

No Lasting Effect

It would appear, from Mr. Pearson's account, that the new agency is to perform in much the manner of the special parliamentary committee. This did lead to legislative action in the rather special case of drug prices. It may have caused some momentary embarrassment to the supermarkets although it would be difficult to prove. from the cost-of-living index, that it had any lasting effect on prices.

"Compliance . . . will be voluntary." But sometimes in wage disputes, the spirit of accommodation is lacking - as with the railways settlement which was imposed by Parliament. What then?

It would seem important that, before venturing into this field, the government should have a very clear idea of its destination. For, if the results are other than those which the public may be led to expect, it will not be easy to write off the experiment, Mr. Pearson said on Tuesday: "If - and when - in the light of experience, an agency with greater powers and authority is required, the government can submit legislation to Parliament for that purpose." Authority to control prices?

Price Umbrella

There is a less obvious danger. The idea, evidently, is to use moral suasion after acceptance of defeat in Vietnam. to limit cost and price increases to what The resulting outcry about "stabs-in-thethe agency considers reasonable. But government approval could easily become an umbrella for price-fixingthis is exactly what happened in the case of the flour-millers, who made their arrangements with the sanction of the Wartime Prices and Trades Board. The matter was exposed by the combines branch but nothing could be done about

It may be that the venture, which now seems to defy attempts at elucidation, will become clearer as the government moves on from consultation to consultation. Or it may, considering the jurisdictional difficulties, disappear altogether. But the likelihood is that we will end up with another government agency with a minimum of impact, at least in the beginning, but, as usual, a maximum of staff.

If the U.S. Doesn't Win

By JOSEPH ALSOP From Washington

IN the prevailing fog of gloom and uncertainty, there are only two things that can be said with perfect certainty about the war in Vietnam. The first is bleakly simple. There is in fact no comfortable, easy halfway house between defeat and victory. No one who has studied North Vietnamese policy, labored to read the captured documents, and followed on the spot the development of Hanoi's war plans, tactics and strategy, believes for one moment that such a halfway house exists today, or will ever exist in the future. The well-intentioned people who offer theoretical blueprints for such halfway houses are as ignorant of the realities as the people who used to peddle the view that Josef Stalin was really a nice guy at

Tenacity, Courage

The North Vietnamese leaders are men with a tenacity and courage that seem all the more admirable in the present climate in Washington. They are also men endowed with the most steely ruthlessness. In the month of February, they expended their troops at a rate of more than 10,000 men a week and in the week of March 2 to March 9, they were still expending troops so lavishly that their losses exceeded 6,700 men - and this is without counting their wounded.

Take as their population base the 16.5 million people of North Vietnam, plus the 5 million plus-or-minus under VC control in the south. Make the appropriate conversion. You find that the Hanoi leaders are in fact accepting losses which, if accepted by the United States of America, would run from 60,000 to 100,000 men a week in killed-in-action

They are accepting these quite unprecedented rates of loss - ten times as high as the average in the recent past because they are going for broke. They are going for broke - trying to win the war in a short time - because they know they cannot stand the strain of greatly prolonged war. And they are ready to make such appalling sacrifices because they want to get their grip on South Vietnam.

Hanoi Dominance

To get their grip on South Vietnam at cheaper cost, the Hanoi leaders might well accept one or another of the crazier halfway house solutions that have been proposed in the United States. But if that is ever permitted to happen, Saigon will be ruled from Hanoi in a very short space of time.

All the millions of Vietnamese who have put their faith in the United States will then suffer cruelly for this misplaced faith. The U.S. will also have experienced its first defeat in war since this republic was established. And that leads to the second certainty in the present situation, which is also bleak and Feeble, needless acceptance of defeat in Vietnam will poison American political life for a generation or more.

The circumstances that produced the terrible McCarthy-time were downright trivial, compared to the hideous circumstances that will confront this country back", the search for scapegoats, the accusations of disloyalty and worse, can in truth be expected to make the McCarthy-time seem downright cozy in retrospect.

Frightening Turn

Considering how obvious this ought to be, one is all but driven to conclude that the American left has gone collectively insane. As anyone should be able to see, there is already acute danger of the most frightening sort of a turn to the right in this country. The extreme postures of the Negro racists and the trouble in the cities are quite enough to provoke such a rightwards turn.

The President's riot commission was no more than realistic, when it warned of the possibility of American apartheid. That risk will be hard enough to circumvent, and that problem will be hard enough to solve, without the added poisons that are sure to be engendered by the first defeat in war in American history. Add these other poisons to the present mix, and the American future hardly bears contemplation.

Need to Win

Without regard to the wisdom or unwisdom of past decisions, there is therefore only one safe course to take. That course is to make the needed effort to win the war. Winning does not mean crushing North Vietnam, and it does not demand the measures proposed by men like General Curtis Lemay. Winning means no more than forcing the Hanoi leaders to call home their troops, and to cease threatening their neighbors in Laos and South Vietnam.

As any rational man should be able to see from the loss rates and population figures cited above, the Hanoi leaders cannot imaginably sustain the kind of effort they are now making for a very long time. If you go for broke and fail, the failure leaves you broken. Hence there is nothing hopeless in the present situation: but because of the American advocates of defeat-at-any-price, there is profound danger for the American

Where Does Pierre Trudeau Stand?

OTTAWA - Pierre Trudeau, candidate for the Liberal leadership, has been something of an enigma to political observers.

While his views on constitutional matters are well known, his position in the political spectrum is much less clear. In consequence he has been variously described as a left-wing Liberal, a "socialist", a pragmatist, a radical or middle-of-the-roader.

His actual approach to major social, economic and financial issues emerges from the following text of an interview with Maurice Western, Times Ottawa correspondent.

Q.: Do you feel that Canadian governments, as a whole, are spending too much, too little, or about the right amount on social welfare of all kinds?

Trudeau: Right now, I'd say they are spending just about the right amounts. I wouldn't want to see them pushing forward with any great gusto in the area of social welfare.

I think the present set of social welfare legislation and benefits, which we have in Canada and in the provinces, is a good balance.

It puts us in the forefront of most western industrial countries and I think now we are entering into a period when our approach to problems of economic or social distress will be less by way of universal benefits without means test and much more by way of addressing oneself to specific problems.

In other words, it used to be necessary. I think, in the past when we were a much greater distance removed from the affluent society than we are today to think in terms of universal benefits without, you know, hordes of civil servants inspectors prying into people's lives. But I think now, as we are port.

approaching a more affluent society, we will have to think with greater precision of those small groups of people which are living on the fringes of this society and help them in a way which will be more beneficial, perhaps less costly, but much more personal than just giving them a cheque.

We will have to, as we are beginning to do now, re-train, re-cycle, help them to move from one place to another; consider that one generation perhaps, has a right to stay in its present place but not subsidize it to stay there forever with the family but to the family re-train for some other thing.

I think our whole approach will be different now.

Q.: Do you believe that the government should press on for a guaranteed income for Canadians as advocated by some of the candidates?

Trudeau: No. I don't. The idea is an attractive one.

It is theoretically very attractive in the sense that it tends to do away with endless bureaucratic solutions to a whole different set of problems and tries to solve them through one income tax re-

Doesn't Meet The Point people believe that it is

And, therefore, it is attractive in the sense that it would simplify the administration of these things but it doesn't meet the kind of point that I'm making. I think the people that we want to help now are people who won't be helped just because they are getting a cheque, which will bring them to the minimum of what we decide to be the good standard of living for the average Canadian.

The person now who is below that is, in a very large number of cases, the person who needs personal help. It is not a matter of making sure he has the minimum income: it is a matter of helping him re-train and readapt to the new psychology of new environment. I have no theoretical objection to the guaranteed minimum income. I don't think it is socialism or anything like

If it would simplify some solution for the pockets of poverty which are plaguing us

Q: Do you think, after these many years of deficits, that the federal government bud-get should be balanced for some years to come? Trudeau: Well, I don't have any great refinements Keynesianism or new Keynesianism. I think that the theory of the balanced budget over the whole cycle is the right approach.

You know, a deficitary budget is justifiable when you have to combat deflation and a budgetary surplus is necesinflation. I think the general approach is right.

So, when you ask me if, for some time to come we should balance the budget, it really depends on whether we are going to have fairly stable times for some time to come. If we are, I think we should balance the budget: if we are think we should tend to have

People are really trying to get more out of the govern-ment and more out of the economy than they are put-ting into it and this really means inflation. The answer to that is to address yourself to the people and to explain to them that can't get more; otherwise they are defeating their own purposes.

Q. Do you think that the present level of taxation, federal, provincial and municipal, is an excessive burden on the Canadian economy and do you see any prospect of a reduction of it in the foreseeable future? Trudeau: I don't see any prospect of a reduction in it. The tax-structure committee, which let us see its projections, this body composed of federal and provincial officials, shows on the contrary an increase in expenditures at all levels of government, a much greater increase at the provincial and municipal level.

I hope they will exercise restraint. We've just announced now that we are putting a freeze on the civil service. But I can't hopefully pretend there will be a reduction. I just hope there will not be a continued increase. I think that people will be asked to realize that there is no Operation Bootstrap in the economic world. You just can't lift yourself by your own bootstraps. If you want the government to continue increasing its benefits or expenditures, you have to increase taxes.

I think people are reaching that realization now. They are catching up with the psychology I was seeking explain when I was answering your question on social bene More and more people now don't want to receive

Don't Want Out-Bidding

They don't want the government to continue spending and parties out-bidding each other with social benefits.

I think now you will have to become much more sophisticated. The governments will have to look for spendings in those areas which are occupied by private enterprise or the big corporation.

We will have to choose key areas which are important for the welfare of the Canadian citizen; those areas where the market operations would not produce the values you want and invest in those areas. For instance, the CBC is an obvious example. This is one area which, for reasons of culture and Canadianism, we ant the state to get in and make expenditures and this is a positive choice. But citizens, I think, are becoming more and more aware of the need to make this positive choice. Some areas are not done better by governments: some Trudeau: I have no real what Stevenson called the theoretical answer to that. I revolution of rising expectacan take it or leave it. It really depends on what tions and which he applied, I the total fiscal base is: how and whether this would be the most efficient way to get it.

In other words, I have no theoretical objection to a capital gains tax but I would like to see it demonstrated that now it is the best way. I know the arguments against it; it wouldn't produce all that much more; it would tend, perhaps, to put a damper on risk investment and so on.

In the context of something like the Carter commission, when you are re-doing all your fiscal laws, then this idea could be integrated but I would hate to see it come out were sure that that would produce an over-all better result. I believe that in taxation, as much as in all the rest of life, we must systems engineers; we mustn't look at the optimum production of any one plant or any one tax or of any one public enterprise.

We must see if it fits in with 'the over-all: there is no point in having the optimum production in a chemical mill f you pollute your waters and render life unbearable. The same thing with taxes

You can get more money out of one tax but it is the over-all effect that you want. This is what I would like to see. Q. Do you believe that Canada should welcome foreign investment on a large scale; do you see any future danger to our sovereignty in the so-called economic pene-tration of United States capital; do you favor any special taxes on this capital when it is invested in Canada; and do you agree with Walter Gordon's ideas about buying back Canadian industry?

Trudeau: Well, the answer to the first two questions is

I welcome foreign capital, ves. and I see a danger to Canada's political sovereignty, yes, if this foreign capital comes in without our even taking cognizance of the fact and meeting the problem it

It is really the problem of economic domination by one country over Canada and over many, many other countries. My approach is that I favor ne free flow of investment and technology into Canada because we need it to develop our country.

I think we must start with the proposition that we should not discriminate against it in Canada.

We must, however, ask that it, the foreign capital, abide by our laws and, when it is corporate investment, that the corporations behave as good corporate citizens; to use that well-hackneyed phrase

This is essential but I don't think we should have dis-criminatory laws or taxation against foreign capital. I think we should use moral suasion: for instance to get foreign enterprise to use more Canadian directors and Canadian know-how. I think we should use tools which are permissible even in Canada to give incentives for money to be used in investments in one area rather than another

I think we should also-I believe in Mr. Gordon's idea for a Canadian Development Corporation, not so much for aim of buying back Canada.

I don't think Mr. Gordon himself would want to say that was his main aim because it is obvious that the important thing is not to buy back the past but to make sure that we own the future

If we are going to spend all our savings in buying back yesterday, we won't have any more to invest in tomorrow.

I think that the central idea of the CDC is that it will permit Canadian funds to find investment opportunities Canada. will apply to the investments of the future.

Ventures For The Future

Joined with the proper kind of enterpreneurship, this will permit Canadian equity investment in the right kind of things for the future. It will also permit, shall we say. Canadian owners of Canadian enterprises who want to sell out to find a Canadian

I think we should keep away as far as possible from the idea of buying back Canadian or even buying Canadian if it isn't good, efficient Canadian.

In other words I don't think that this corporation should be run on the basis that we must buy everything which is going to the United States.

But if there is a good, going concern which is tuned to the future, which really has a of being a great productive area for the future, think there should Canadian funds available to make a bid for it.

The way it happens now is that very often the Canadian people who are selling are selling to American corporations who can make an easy buy because they have the credit to do it. They often buy it out with Canadian money, just on their own credit; money from Ca-nadian banks. Well, if the CDC existed, this wouldn't have to happen. Now the dangers, of course we are all well aware of. If the CDC is run on a strict nationalist basis, it will be a flop; it will be a failure. must be run on an efficient entrepreneurial basis like any of the good holding companies in Canada or in the United States. Q.: How do you feel about a free trade area embracing Canada and the United States, and perhaps other countries? assuming that Britain is not able to enter the Common Market, would you favor the creation of an Atlantic Free Trade area embracing Brithe EFTA countries Canada and the United States?

Trudeau: The theoretical answer to this is easy. I would like the world to be a free trade area. The more Canada can participate in a larger free trade area the better it will be for all concerned. Therefore, I think Canada should tend towards participating as much as possible in a free trade area or even in a

One of the men, described as tall and wiry, was said to have "sliced" open his attacker's forehead, causing an ugly wound that required stitches at a nearby firmary. I think we must start with proposition that every Canadian, no matter where he lives - by the sea or in the mountains or on the plains has a right to the good life; otherwise, why would he be interested in being a Canadian?

form it with the United States; I think we should try to form it with Britain; with western Europe. This has to be done by stages, of course.

They are not perfect yet but they are certainly now a way by which the poorer provinces are receiving via the federal government equalization payments; such amounts to make them on a par with the average budgetary possibilities of any other province. So this is the right approach for the over-all problem.

Regional Disparities There will always remain within each region or province special cases - we are meeting some of them with the Atlantic Development Board; we are meeting some others with ARDA; we are meeting others with the PFRA and I think that all our policies are good in the sense that they tend to correct this problem of regional dispari-

Other British astonomers, Ryle said, are of the same all persuaded that natural phenomena, the inner pulsations of a white dwarf or neutron star, are the much more probable source.

Scientists from Ryle's team at the Cavendish laboratory's Mullard radio astronomy laboratory first heard the incredibly regular radio signals last July, and Ryle himself last week indicated that he had identified the source as coming from a specific blue star of the 18th The Washington Post

In an interview, Ryle expressed himself as annoyed that a few British and American newspapers had made much of the possibility that the signals were the work of "little green men."

"I suppose that's that they want," he said, "so they keep talking about it."

It is, he conceded, impos sible to say that the signals are not the work of intelligent beings in another stellar system since it is impossible to disprove a negative. But alternate explanations

"There has been no further evidence," he continued, "to cast doubt on the previous conclusions that the signals are not contrivances of living creatures but rather are natural phenomena.'

The reasons, which Ryle gave are: 1. Observation of the signals over several months do not show any orbital motion of the source. If there were intelligent beings responsible for the pulsations of 1.337 seconds - they would most likely explanation is that the radio emanations are regular electronic bursts caused by surface shock waves of "collapsed" stars.

Big Changes Predicted In Probation

DUNCAN - Substantial change in the way probation was forecast here Wednesday by Douglas David son, assistant chief of the B.C probation service.

He said there is a bill before the House of Commons which will leave it to the discretion of individual magistrates whether to place a person on probation. Mr. Davidson said the existing law is that only first offenders be placed on probation. second offenders only if the first offence was of a differen nature or happened five years earlier

He said the new legislation also would provide a standard probation order which could be registered in a court of equal jurisdiction in any province to which the person in question parole supervision and are supervising 515 cases where maintenance orders have been issued by the court and 320 on a voluntary basis.

Mr. Davidson said the great-st expansion in the probation service in recent years has been in the family and children's court committee work.

"We're trying to solve family problems without the interven-tion of a judge."

Mr. Davidson said this work has been affected by a Supreme Court decision of last October which confirmed that juvenile delinquency encompasses viola-tions of minor provincial and municipal statutes.

"We have suggested that no charges be laid in such cases and the matter referred either to the probation service or social welfare department.

"We can try to overcome the which these problems from offences arise.

Exploration Work Aided By Computers

TORONTO (CP) - Canadian industry is leading the world in developing equipment and tech-niques for wilderness transpor-tation, Kelly H. Gibson, president of Pacific Petroleums Ltd. of Caigary, says. He told a marketing workshop sponsored by the Canadian Gas

Association that an example is the development by Canadian industry of a wide-track carrier that can carry 45,000 pounds of cargo across muskeg. He said a shift in the search for new natural gas reserves towards the Northwest Territories is adding to the cost of natural gas producers.

Most of the easily explored

gas reserves now have been discovered and the search now is moving into the almost inaccessible areas toward the N.W.T. border. Adding to the problem access is the reluctance of qualified personnel to working in remote regions.

He said computers are being used more in aiding exploration Wells in fields at least 50 miles from Fort St. John, B.C., are operated from a central control computer in the community. The fields are inaccessible by road but each has a small landing strip that allows a technician to land and make repairs when necessary.

CAFES MAY BE EXEMPT FROM HOLIDAY RULES

Forcing restaurants to pay the equivalent of double time and a half to employees on holidays will hurt B.C.'s tourist image, the legislature was told Thursday.

Herb Capozzi (SC—Vancouver Centre) said restaurants will either be forced to close on holidays when they should be onen to serve tourists or they will have to put out says.

will either be forced to close on homoays when they should be open to serve tourists or they will have to put out special high-priced holiday menus to meet increased costs.

Either way, he said, the effect will hurt the province, especially if tourists think they are being "gouged" by unscrupulous operators.

Labor accounts for 40 per cent of the cost of a restaurant meal, he said.

Labor Minister Peterson replied that the 1967 measure setting up holiday rules had been the subject of many complaints from the service industry generally and is going to be re-opened by the Labor Relations Board.

Further hearings will be held, he said, expressing hope there will be no "undue delay."

It was the closest vote of the session and would have been a tie vote if all opposition MLAs had been in the House.

The issue arose during debate on labor department estimates when Mr. Bruch stopped Dr. Pat McGeer (L—Vancouver-Point Grey) from discussing the administration of the Work-men's Compensation Board because legislation had been introduced on the subject.

Both Liberal Leader Ray Perrault and Gordon Dowding (NDP—Burnaby-Edmonds) said the ruling violated all tradition because WCB affairs always had been debated during labor estimates.

Mr. Bruch held his ground during the ensuing uproar. Speaker William Murray was called in when Mr. Perrault challenged the ruling.

While "bibliology" is described in dictionaries as "an account of books, book lore, it is thought of generally as the Bible."

On the other hand "bibliography" means the history or description of books and manuscripts, with notices of the editions, the dates of printing and other relative annotations.

Using this last as a guide line it is clear the new book will be invaluable to students and researchers, as well as being an asset to book dealers, private collectors and to

I'm also convinced it will be used by many others inter-ested in various phases of British Columbia history. For it lists in concise form thousands of books and pamphlets that tell of conditions, people organizations and travel this province during the years 1849 to 1899 ... and where these books and pamphlets can be found.

Some poetry is included. Indeed, in compiling the book, Mrs. Lowther discovered one of the best descriptions of the Cariboo gold rush was written in verse by a Scot named James Anderson.

Arkle Feels Fine!

(Times News Services) Arkle, Ireland's wonder horse, downed his pint of stout Thursday, flashed a toothy grin and announced by a twitch of his ears that all was well.

This was Arkle's way of celebrating renewed acquaintance with Pat Taaffe, a horse and jockey partnership which the Irish say is the greatest in racing history.

After a full uphill gallop at Greenogue Farm, near Ashbourne in Ireland, Taaffe gave his old partner a pat on the neck and announced: "He's just the same as ever. He'll race again."

Arkle has been out of racing since December, 1966, when he ended an English steeplechase with a broken bone in his right foreleg.

An ordinary horse would never have raced again. But Arkle is no ordinary horse. He gets fan mail from kids throughout the world, most of it addressed simply-"Arkle, Ireland."

The reason? Arkle helped many Irish to buy their houses and have money in the bank in addition. Arkle won 27 of his 35 races and won $210,000. * * *

N. E. Hardy, Labatt president, said in Vancouver Wednesday that the transfer was an integral part of the deal, which includes Labatts providing funds to pay a reported $700,000 debt to the NHL.

There is a governor's meeting in New York Tuesday, but indications are that nothing official will be decided there.

"Oakland still hasn't given notice of motion that they want a discussion on the transfer included on our agenda."

Hardy also said that the present owners of the Oakland franchise would be offered a mi-

'Costs Could Almost Bankrupt Us

TORONTO (CP) - Education Minister William Davis said this week increasing education costs, combined with other government expenses could almost bankrupt Ontario within five years.
"I am not saying this will happen within that period, but it would not be long after," Mr. Davis said in an interview outside the legislature. He said his prediction was based on combined total government spending.

"There is not the slightes doubt in my mind that we shall have to find some alternative method of financing," he said. "What exactly it will be, I don't know, but our estimates over the next five years tell us that the present tax resources simply will not be able to bear the load alone.

"It's fine to build the most wonderful school system in the world, but what good will that do if we are driven into bankruptcy at the same time?

'Curly' Look Results In Bounty of Benefits

The "curly look" which dominates the new trend in hairstyling, promises to yield a double benefit, for not only does it provide a flattering silhouette for all ages with its small head and soft bouncy curls, but also it should allow milady considerable freedom from haircare from one shampoo set to the next.

A well-shaped short haircut provides the foundation for the "curly look". A soft body wave then follows for those who do not have sufficient natural curl.

The body wave is becoming very popular in both Europe and North America, as it can be applied with a very mild solution, and it results in a natural soft hairstyle which tends to last from one shampoo set to another.

The curly look can be adapted for all ages and any number of occasions.

A vertical oval silhouette with the hair feathered at the nape of the neck to give a soft feminine wispy look, is proving to be particularly popular for everyday wear. For evening wear a soft, curly hairpiece may be added to provide a more dramatic outline.

Whether it's feathery curls, glide curls, swirly curls or curly whimsles, the "curly look" awaits women of all ages at the beauty salon.

There's Curl in Your Future!

Tight or loose, long or short, real or in a hairpiece curly hair is "IN" this year.

'Strained Relations To Improve'

The French ambassador to Canada, Hon. Francois Leduc, says the present strained relations between France and Canada will improve.

"The present period of strain is largely due to differences between the federal and Queec provincial governments," said the ambassador, visiting Victoria for the first time Thursday night.

Varicose Veins Often Hereditary

By Dr. WALTER C. ALVAREZ likely to flare up

Varicose veins, or the large dilated veins that look like big worms under the skin of the legs, constitute a disressing prob lem to thousands of women, and less often, to men. Often for years the big veins do not cause any pain or other

Alvarez trouble, but the woman is unhappy because her legs are not pretty. In many cases a woman with the large veins can get through life without doing anything about them-especially if she stays thin and does not have to stand all day in a store. Much standing can cause the legs to swell badly.

A tendency to enlargement of the veins seems often to be inherited, because so often one sees a mother and her daughter with the same big leg veins. If the hereditary tendency is marked, the daughter's veins may enlarge early in life. In other cases the veins may enlarge only as the woman ages, or has children. If the veins show signs of enlarging during a pregnancy, the woman should wear elastic stockings until her baby is born.

Some physicians fear that the presence of constipation make varicose veins bigger, and this is possible. Disease of the heart, can cause the veins in the legs in enlarge. * * *

Veins in the legs have a particularly difficult problem carring blood from the feet up through the abdomen and chest into the heart, because when the person is standing, in the legs and thighs the blood has to flow against the force of gravity, This flow is maintained by the pressure of the blood that comes from the that lie between the arteries and the veins). Also, there are important valves in the veins which help to keep the blood flowing in one direction-up.

Naturally, when the veins become dilated, the valve cusps are no longer big enough to fit tightly, and as a result, blood keeps leaking back down the vein. This starts vicious more the veins dilate. the worse the circulation is in the leg, and then the leg and foot will swell. The skin will get reddish or brown, and rarely it will ulcerate just above the inner ankle.

* * * *

The question is, should the veins be removed early just because they are ugly, because they may give trouble later, or should the woman wait until they give trouble? Actually, some surgeons hate to operate on the veins just for cosmetic reasons, but if they see that the valves of the veins are failing, and allowing some of the blood to leak downward, they decide to remove the dilated veins before they give more serious trouble.

Danger signals may be pain in the veins, or there may appear swelling of the ankles and darkening of the skin about the ankles—due to back pressure of blood in tissues. Trouble is particularly phlebitis, or inflammation of a vein; and with this, there can come a thrombosis—a plug-ging up of the vessel with a blood clot. Then matters can become very bad.

How can a seed make a plant have certain colors?

R

Every plant, of course, is descended from a long line of assorted ancestors. Life is O handed down from generation to generation. The life of a plant may be handed on in a seed. With the gift of life, the seed also carries a set of instructions about features inherited from its family tree.

caused by pigment molecules made from simple chemicals such as carbon and hydrogen. We see them as colors because they just happen to trigger the human vision in certain ways, To the plant, they are merely chemicals with special duties to perform. But the colorful beauty of the plant world prodded human curiosity to probe the mysteries of heredity and helped lead to our present 3. understanding of inherited G family features in plants and animals and also in people.

In the 1800s, Gregor Mendel was curious about color variation in generations of his garden pea plants. Patient notes, careful records and lots of sound reasoning led him to the answer. And the answer un-covered a basic law of nature. Mendel used it to predict that C. seeds from one red and one white parent would all produce red flowers. In the next generation of the same family, there would be three red flowers to one white. The dominant red characteristic appeared most often. The less dominant white feature was hidden until allowed to appear in a few offspring. Mendel proved that family features are inherited according to a definite ratio.

Each seed has a quota of DNA inherited from the family tree. It tells the seed just how A and when to sprout. The nucleus of each new cell has a copy of the original blueprint in seed. The DNA instructs the marigold to paint her face with vellow or vivid orange.

It tells the geranium to use flower colors of pale or vivid tones of red. It tells a pine tree to make lots of green-green sem like this son or daugh-ter would be to be innocent the oak to make yellow-colored chemicals as well as the green chlorophyll. In the fall, when the green chemicals depart, we see the yellow chemicals unmasked and the oak is dressed in golden glory.

Mankind's inherited curiosity C leads us to probe into the nature of the human body. Its miracles and misfortunes, its strengths and weaknesses are inherited from long lines of human ancestors. The more we know of these inherited characteristics, the better. Modern science is on the verge of assembling living cells from non-living chemicals. Gregor Mendel's pea-sorting led to a major breakthrough in biology. He would have felt A humbly proud that he had advanced a step toward mankind's ultimate understanding of the body he is born to inherit.

What is the meaning of perigee?

The word "perigee" belongs to the space age, and every young space-ager should know what it means. It has a partner word called "apogee," and we cannot understand one without the other. Let's begin by A T thinking of a man-made satellite orbiting high, high above the ground on its way around and around the globe. Its orbit goes A round and round, but not in a perfect circle. Our satellite has an oval-shaped orbit. Its width is a bit shorter than its length. And there is another surprise. The round earth is not exactly in the middle of our satellite's orbit.

This means that part of the orbit is higher above us than other parts. Space experts need B o know a lot of math to study the orbit of a satellite. At least we are smart enough to understand two points in the orbit. The perigee point is the one closest to the earth. The apogee point is where the orbit is farthest from the earth. Each time the satellite orbits the globe it passes the closest point of perigee and then the farthest point of apogee.

DRUNKS 'SUFFERING' UNDER NEW RULING

VANCOUVER (CP)-The health of Vancouver's chronic drunks is deteriorating because of a new ruling by the British Columbia government, Police Chief Ralph Booth said Thursday.

The new policy, ordered by the attorney-general's department, calls for the release of drunks without charge after a night in jail-provided they have sobered up. Chief Booth told the police commission this is tough on the habitual drunks, who no longer get the chance to "dry out" and eat properly while serving a short prison sentence. As a result of the no-charge policy, he said, many of them are drunk and picked up again the day of release, with the 'whole sad cycle' starting again.

He said the officer in charge of the city jail reported "very perceptible deterioration" in the health of habitual

Prof. Watkins went a big step beyond his report's proposals to advocate new legislation demanding information on foreign-exchange transactions by companies in Canada.

It would be the kind of information usually provided under foreign-exchange controls, he said. But it could be demanded without imposing controls as such.

What explains these curious lapses of memory, I haven't the least idea. In Freudian theory, I seem to recall that the conscious mind refuses to come up with the names of those who displease its owner.

Yet brilliant Mr. Gelinas, far from offending any of us, had a sturdy claim on our goodwill.

For myself, I'm capable of forgetting anything, including where I've parked my car, and the corner where my wife and I have agreed to meet

But why should alert people of normally retentive memory—you included, I ex-pect—sometimes blank out when required to turn up a name almost as familiar as their own?

forgotten my own name. Enquiring around in a cautious sort of way, however, I learn that this sort of thing happens fairly often.

My dear one tells me that while shopping, she completely forgot her married name—a circumstance which remembering Freud's explantation, worried me. Then she added that she hadn't been able to dredge up her maiden name, either.

Luckily, these aberrations end almost as quickly as they strike. You remember, the other party says comfortingly, "It happens to all of us once in a while," and off you go with identity firmly re-estab-

Again, the hiatus. "Dear, this is my friend, Joe ...

Most of us learn to fake our way out of the "Joe-uh" impasse, but how do you square matters when, while introducing your wife, you forget her name?

This happened not long ago to a fellow I know very well, and whose name is right on the tip of my tongue. He stood helpless, while the party host, a character of sadist ten-dency, broke off grinning to ask, "Well, who is she? Someone you picked up off the

TORONTO (CP) - Canadian industry is leading the world in developing equipment and techniques for wilderness transpor tation, Kelly H. Gibson, president of Pacific Petroleums Ltd. of Calgary, says.

He told a marketing workshop sponsored by the Canadian Gas Association that an example is the development by Canadian industry of a wide-track carrier that can carry 45,000 pounds of cargo across muskeg. He said a shift in the search

Most of the easily explored

gas reserves now have been discovered and the search now is moving into the almost inaccessible areas toward the N.W.T. border. Adding to the problem of access is the reluctance of qualified personnel to working in remote regions.

He said computers are being used more in aiding exploration

Wells in fields at least 50 miles from Fort St. John, B.C., are operated from a central control computer in the community. The fields are inaccessible by road but each has a small landing strip that allows a technician to land and make
